Incorporating New Evidence

Mycenaean Greek in the Revised Supplement

Brent Vine

The editors of LSJ, whose final fascicle appeared in 1940, could scarcely have imagined the 1952 decipherment of Linear B and the wealth of information it provided about the Greek language and Mycenaean culture. The Preface to the 1968 Supplement justified the absence of Mycenaean Greek material with the assertion that '[t]he scholarly world is at present divided on the validity of the Ventris decipherment'. While it is true that pockets of resistance to the decipherment persisted until surprisingly late,[1] the alleged scholarly division seems overstated for the mid-1960s, when major handbooks like those of Ventris and Chadwick, Vilborg, and Palmer[2] were very much part of mainstream scholarship. However that may be, a decision was finally reached, a full two decades after the foundational handbook of Mycenaean Greek had reached its second edition (Ventris and Chadwick 1973), to incorporate Mycenaean Greek forms into the 1996 Revised Supplement. More than two decades on, we can take stock of that decision, first so as to assess some aspects of its implementation in LSJ Revd Suppl., and then to consider what this may mean for the treatment of Mycenaean Greek in future editions.

6.1. ON THE MYCENAEAN MATERIAL IN LSJ REVD SUPPL.: OMISSIONS AND INCONSISTENCIES

For the selection of material, the Preface to LSJ Revd Suppl. says only (p. ix): 'The more speculative additions to the vocabulary have not been entered.' Yet there are numerous omissions and inconsistencies, all the more striking because of the large quantity of accurately recorded material.

[1] In the 1992 postscript to his classic account of the decipherment, Chadwick noted that there were at that time 'still a few unbelievers' (Chadwick 1992a, 142).

Personal and place names. Especially problematic is the treatment of personal and place names, given their profusion in the Mycenaean lexicon. Evidently some onomastic material was deemed worthy of inclusion—perhaps mainly, as it seems, forms with exact correspondents in alphabetic Greek (e.g., Myc. o-re-ta s.v. Ὀρέστης). But this elides much of importance, for which the following examples may be cited:

(i) a-re-ka-sa-da-ra appears s.v. ἀλέξανδρος, but the 'Kurzname' a-re-ke-se-u /Alekseus/ goes unmentioned, despite the prominence of this formation in Mycenaean onomastics, one of a series of morphological patterns that differentiate the Mycenaean system from first-millennium onomastic usage (Morpurgo Davies 1999).

(ii) LSJ Revd Suppl. users have no way of knowing that first-millennium -φοίτης or -φόντης names and epithets (Hom. Ἀργεϊφόντης, etc.) correspond to Myc. -qo-i-ta, -qo-ta names.[3]

(iii) Myc. ne-ti-ja-no /Nestiānōr/ prefigures Thessalian Νέσσανδρος and is closely related to Hom. Νέστωρ (Peters 1986, 547; García Ramón 1992, 243).

(iv) While Myc. ra-wo-do-ko is cited s.v. λαός as equivalent to Λαόδοκος, there is no mention of Myc. names with second member -ra-wo, including e-ti-ra-wo /Ertilāwos/, a remarkable counterpart to Hom. Λαέρτης (Mühlestein 1968, 113 = 1987, 24; García Ramón 1992, 240).

(v) Perhaps most striking, among personal names, is the absence (s.v. ἄφθιτος) of the woman's name a-qi-ti-ta, which implies or encapsulates the earliest attestation of the Homeric formula (or formulaic component) κλέος ἄφθιτον (Risch 1987; Lejeune 1987, cf. Watkins 1995, 174; Katz 2010b, 361; García Ramón 2011, 225).

(vi) Most toponyms with clear first-millennium correspondent are duly recorded; but while e-ko-me-no appears s.v. Ὀρχομενός (cf. Ἐρχομενός [Hes.+]), there is no mention of the man's name o-ko-me-ne-u, despite the interesting appearance of the vowel alternation /erkʰo-/ ~ /orkʰo-/ already in Mycenaean, and the parallel with Hom. Ὀρχομενός as a man's name (Il. 2.511, 605).

Other compounds and derivatives. The treatment of non-onomastic compounds and derivatives is likewise problematic, especially where an alphabetic Greek counterpart does not exist. To be sure, a lemma like τοιχοδόμος*—an unattested word constructed in order to register Myc. to-ko-do-mo 'builder, mason'—indicates a measure of attention to Mycenaean compounds and a willingness (cf. LSJ Revd Suppl. Preface pp. viii–ix) to record forms not documented in first-millennium Greek. Yet gaps and inconsistencies abound:

[3] E.g., among many striking examples, Myc. a no qo ta /Anorkʷʰontās/ or /Anr̥kʷʰontās/, cf. Hom. ἀνδρεϊφόντης (García Ramón 2011, 221).

(vii) While te-u-ke-pi and te-tu-ko-wo-a₂ are recorded (s.vv. τεῦχος, τεύχω), there is no trace of o-pi-te-u-ke-e-we (nom.pl., cf. nom.sg. o-pi-te-ke-e-u) 'equipment-overseer', displaying 'a remarkable use of the suffix -ευς' (Meißner 2006, 168), based on an s-stem prepositional governing compound.

Nor can one find the following (to list only a few):

(viii) a-mo-ra-ma /āmōrāmar/ 'day to day' (cf. Hom. ἦμαρ);

(ix) do-po-ta 'master' (cf. δεσπότης);

(x) me-ta-ki-ti-ta /metaktitai/ 'fellow settlers' (vs. simplex ki-ti-ta s.v. κτίτης);

(xi) o-po-qo /opōk^{w}ois/ 'blinders' to block a horse's sight (cf. πρόσωπον, μέτωπον);

(xii) ko-to-no-o-ko /ktoinohok^{h}oi/ 'land-holders' (cf. simplex ko-to-i-na/ko-to-na s.v. κτοίνα; the lemma ἔχω lists Mycenaean finite forms, participles, and the first compound member e-ke^{o}, but not the second compound member ^{o}o-ko).

It may be added that this last form carries a good deal of interest in connection with Grassmann's Law, one of the best-known features of Greek historical and synchronic grammar. This regular pattern of dissimilation of aspiration is typically illustrated by citing the contrast between Gk. (present) ἔχω and (future) ἕξω: in the somewhat quaint formulation by Smyth (1956, 32, §125e.), 'ἔχω have stands for ἕχω . . . , the rough changing to the smooth breathing before a rough stop. The rough breathing reappears in the future ἕξω.' As it happens, a similar process is found in Sanskrit, also known under the name of 'Grassmann's Law'; and for a long time it was thought (and continues to be taught in some quarters) that the two processes, despite some differences of detail, are ultimately one and the same, and go back to a remote period not far removed from Proto-Indo-European itself.[4] Yet the evidence of Mycenaean forms such as ko-to-no-o-ko, with its internal 'hiatus' (as far as the Linear B syllabic spelling goes),[5] now makes clear that this view is mistaken. The orthographic 'hiatus' indicates that the second member of the compound began with /h-/ (thus -hok^{h}o-); and this, in turn, points to the likelihood that Grassmann's Law in Greek is a post-Mycenaean innovation, and thus an independent development as compared with Grassmann's Law in Indic. The omitted form ko-to-no-o-ko, then, turns out to be an important data point in the analysis of the relative chronology of Grassmann's Law in Greek.[6] As a corollary, one may note that the practice of transcribing Mycenaean forms like

[4] For a useful historical conspectus of the question and related issues, see Collinge 1985, 47 61.

[5] Similarly Mycenaean pu ko so , e ke e /puksohek^{h}ehe/ 'with boxwood struts (vel sim.)' (also nowhere in evidence in LSJ Revd Suppl.), with second member built to the same root as in o ko. (On the orthography of Mycenaean compounds with word divider, indicated here with a comma, see Melena 2014, 127 8.)

[6] For further discussion of Grassmann's Law in Greek and its chronology (as well as the typology of such dissimilatory processes involving aspiration), see Vine 2014, with additional references.

e-ke 'he has' or e-ke-e 'to have' as /ek^{h}ei/ and /ek^{h}ehen/ (still common, as in Duhoux 2008 passim, a prominent handbook treatment) is to be abandoned, since such forms most likely reflect pre-Grassmann /hek^{h}ei/, /hek^{h}ehen/. Finally, as is now abundantly clear, first-millennium dialectal forms with double aspirate (such as θυφλος 'blind', in a famous early West Ionic inscription) do not reflect hoary pre-Grassmann archaisms or words that somehow miraculously escaped the operation of Grassmann's Law, but instead arise from trivial assimilatory processes.[7]

Equally numerous omissions involve derivational patterns:

(xiii) While the man's name ko-ma-we appears s.v. κομήεις (along with gen. ko–ma–we-to, though not dat. ko-ma-we-te), the theonym ko-ma-we-te-ja, with complex morphological derivation (García Ramón 2011, 218, n. 8), is missing.

Other lexical categories. Similar problems affect verbs, nouns, and adjectives, as in the following miscellaneous examples:

(xiv) Under ἄπειμι, 3pl. pres. a-pe-e-si and the participle a-pe-o (nom.sg.m.) are listed (though not pl. a-pe-o-te); yet the important participial form a-pe-a-sa (nom.sg.f., cf. Arcadian/Messenian ἔασσα vs. Att. οὖσα) is given only s.v. εἰμί.

(xv) The verb form a-pe-e-ke /apehēke/ 'he has released' or 'he has excused' or 'he has sent away'—important as one of the only Mycenaean perfect or (as in this case) aorist indicative forms that may have an augment—does not appear s.vv. ἵημι or ἀφίημι (or anywhere else, so far as I can determine).

(xvi) There is no mention of the basic verb form pe-re 'φέρει' s.v. φέρω (or anywhere else), despite its clear usage at least in the important religious text PY Tn 316, interestingly coordinated with a-ke 'ἄγει' (itself duly recorded s.v. ἄγω).

(xvii) Also unmentioned (s.v. φθίω) is the perfect active participle (nom.pl. or nom.du.) e-qi-ti-wo-e 'dead' (TH Wu 75, published in 1990; see García Ramón 1990 on the extraordinary linguistic interest of the form).

(xviii) Recorded s.v. ἄναξ is nom.sg. wa-na-ka, but not dat.sg. wa-na-ka-te ~ wa-na-ke-te.

(xix) Given Cretan ἐρευτάς, one expects to find e-re-u-te-re 'inspector' (dat.sg.).

(xx) The lemma υἱός (which in LSJ Revd Suppl. records dialectal and other variants) ignores both dat.sg. i-je-we (in a transparent context in the religious text PY Tn 316, already cited—among the most famous of Mycenaean texts and one of central importance for early Greek religion: di-wo i-je-we 'to the son of Zeus') as well as its variant i-jo (now augmented by i-ju; see Hajnal 2006, 64–6).

(xxi) One looks in vain s.v. πᾶς for Mycenaean forms of this word (including pa-te 'πάντες', dat.pl. pa-si, /pan/ in to-so-pa 'so much altogether'),

[7] For the West Ionic text and the interpretation of θυφλος via anticipation of aspiration, see most conveniently Colvin 2007, 124.

although pa-si-te-o-i (dat.pl., probably 'to the All-Gods' rather than 'to all the gods'—another item of importance for Greek religion) is listed under θεός, and ku-su-pa is recorded s.v. σύμπας.

6.2. WHITHER MYCENAEAN IN LSJ?

The above exercise could easily be extended; but that would serve little purpose, and might seem to impugn unfairly the overall high level of accuracy of the substantial Mycenaean Sprachgut that is recorded in LSJ Revd Suppl., which amounts (by my rough count) to well over 300 lexical items. But the striking omissions and inconsistencies raise broader questions, some of which may profitably be listed here, with minimal comment, as a stimulus for future discussion.

There is, first of all, a basic cui bono question: what is the audience to which Mycenaean material in an edition of LSJ is directed, and for what purpose(s) is such material provided? Indeed, the Preface to the 1968 Supplement had judged that Mycenaean material might be 'better left to special lexica'. There is perhaps room for debate on this fundamental point. But my own view (compare Katz, Chapter 5, this volume, on etymology) is that the middle course chosen by the editors of LSJ Revd Suppl. was the correct one for that time and remains correct for the future—in other words, substantial lexical coverage in the dictionary, with readers referred to more specialized bibliography in the 'Preface' (as in LSJ Revd Suppl. pp. viii–ix).[8]

What, further, is meant by 'substantial', in the above phrase 'substantial lexical coverage'? Once again, although one may quibble with various details, I think that the editors of LSJ Revd Suppl. achieved approximately the right level of coverage overall, at least with respect to non-onomastic data. The policy to exclude '[t]he more speculative additions to the vocabulary' (LSJ Revd Suppl. p. ix, cited above at the outset) was of course appropriate, and was generally well implemented; judgments of this kind as to what is 'speculative', moreover, will change (indeed, have already changed) with the accumulation of research on Mycenaean vocabulary. The less speculative material, however, was generally well covered, with accurate grammatical identifications and appropriate lexical comparisons with first-millennium material, when available. The major exception, in my view, concerns onomastic (and to some extent also toponymic and ethnonymic) data: although,

[8] Such resources, of course, can now be updated in ways that would be useful for non specialist users, ill equipped as they are to navigate what has become a forbiddingly voluminous secondary literature.

as already mentioned, some such items were incorporated,[9] there are significant omissions (cf. (ii)–(vi) and (xiii) above). In this category, one could even argue that some of the more 'speculative' material may be worthy of inclusion: who, for example, would deny a place to the obscure and (at least among specialists) much-discussed figure di-ri-mi-jo, dat.sg. of a 'Δρίμιος*' (PY Tn 316.10), explicitly identified in the celebrated Pylian religious text already cited twice above as 'the son of Zeus' (cf. (xx))?[10]

There are, to be sure, subsidiary questions that concern the integration of Mycenaean material with other elements of the Greek lexical coverage, such as dialectal data (see Probert, Chapter 12, this volume), etymological notices (see Katz, Chapter 5, this volume), and the 'diachronic taxonomy' of Greek vocabulary (see Clackson, Chapter 16, this volume, with discussion of Myc. qe-to-ro-po-pi 'quadrupeds'), to say nothing of useful comparisons with a range of other lexica, as considered by Meier-Brügger, Chapter 18, this volume (including remarks on Myc. do-e-ro 'δοῦλος' and related forms) and West, Chapter 19, this volume. Left aside here entirely, as it must be, is the question of how Mycenaean Greek might appear in a digital or online version of LSJ, should such an entity ever materialize: see West, Chapter 19, this volume, for some preliminary comments on that eventuality.

For the foreseeable future, specialists trained in Linear B and Mycenaean Greek language—especially classical linguists interested in the history of the Greek language and classical archaeologists specializing in Bronze Age culture and history—will no doubt access Mycenaean vocabulary primarily via specialized lexica, handbooks, or other dedicated resources. Given the nature of the subject and the state of current research, this is quite as it should be. But Mycenaean Greek, as the oldest surviving form of the language that is otherwise treated so magisterially in LSJ and therefore the oldest direct window onto Greek culture, is (as specialists well know) a treasure trove of lexical riches, notwithstanding the uninspiring list format of the language's documentation. This is material that deserves to be made available to any classicist—or indeed any lover of the Greek language—who is inclined to consult, or even just to peruse, the other riches to be found in LSJ.

[9] Cf. above on o re ta, a re ka sa da ra, ra wo do ko, e ko me no, ko ma we; also recorded, e.g., are familiar names and places like a ki re u 'Ἀχιλλεύς', e ko to 'Ἕκτωρ', ze pu₂ ro 'Ζέφυρος', a pa i ti jo (cf. Ἥφαιστος), ka to 'Κάστωρ', ko ri to 'Κόρινθος', and a number of others, not to mention theonyms: a ta na 'Ἀθήνη', etc.
