Taken from the standard editions of Murphy, Carney, and others, the verse featured in the Primer adds up to an impressive mini-anthology of annotated Irish poetry for the beginner, including the Pangur Bán poem, verse from the Líadan-Cuirithir cycle, a selection of Blathmac, the Reicne Fothaid Canainne, and Finn's rhapsodic praise of Maytime.

Stifter's considerably longer and more detailed Sengoídelc (391 chockful pages, versus the 200 pages of Tigges/Ó Béarra), is organized into 58 lessons. While it features some practice poetry (sometimes the same "greatest hits" as in the Primer), Sengoídelc relies for its exercises primarily on prose selections--from, for example, the Glosses and the Táin Bó Cúailnge. All practice texts are supplied with phonetic transcriptions. Stifter has even composed English-to-Old-Irish translation exercises, as self-parodying as anything in E.G. Quin's Old Irish Workbook (RIA, 1975), e.g., "The bold scribes stop the weak thieves in the ship." Glossing is relegated to an all-purpose Old Irish-English word-list in the back of the book, and there is an appendix with the "Solutions" to all the exercises. Mindful of future editions, Stifter has set up a website where readers can register their observations and advice.

Both works provide some rudimentary information for the beginner on the Celtic and Indo-European linguistic background to Old Irish. They of course offer definitions of the more specialized terms necessary for the understanding of OI/Celtic languages (e.g., "lenition"). But teachers planning to use one or both books in the college classroom should note that Tigges assumes "a basic familiarity with the terminology of phonetics and syntax," while Stifter is more willing (or has more time and space!) to walk the raw beginner through terms/concepts such as "inflection" and "case."

Joseph Nagy
English Department
UCLA
jfnagy@humnet.ucla.edu

Hṛdā mánasā: Sbornik statej k 70-letiju so dnja roždenija professora Leonarda Georgieviča Gercenberga [Studies Presented to Professor Leonard G. Herzenberg on the Occasion of his 70th Birthday]. Edited by N.N. Kazansky, with the assistance of E.R. Kryuchkova, A.S. Nikolaev, and A.V. Shatskov. St Petersburg: Nauka, 2005. 525 pp. (large format).

A. I. Domašnev: Trudy po germanskomu jazykoznaniju i sociolingvistike [A.I. Domashnev: Studies in Germanic Linguistics and Sociolinguistics]. Edited by L.B. Konchuk, with the assistance of A.V. Bondarko, N.A. Bondarko, N.N. Kazansky, and S.A. Shubik. Saint Petersburg: Nauka, 2005. 1113 pp. (large format).

It is a pleasure to renew a tradition inaugurated in an earlier UCLA publication (see Vine 1999; Ivanov 1999) by taking note of two recent works from St. Petersburg, Russia, both of them grand—in all senses of the word.

Pride of place in terms of sheer physical grandeur goes to the collection of writings on Germanic linguistics by A.I. Domashnev (1927-2001), with some fifty-six studies (forty in Russian, the rest in German) in more than a thousand large-format pages, displaying Domashnev's protean activity in three major areas (and many other sub-areas), "The German Language and the Modern World," "Sociolinguistics," and "Historical Studies in Grammar and Lexicon." The editor provides a biographical sketch and a detailed appreciation of Domashnev's scientific oeuvre by way of introduction to the volume, and the studies themselves are preceded by a listing of Domashnev's scholarly publications. Anyone interested in German and Germanic will find much of value here.

Less bulky but no less important—and of more direct interest to readers of this journal—is the Festschrift for the Indo-Europeanist and Iranist Leonard Herzenberg (b. 1934), containing thirty-eight contributions, likewise with a biographical sketch by the editor and a list of the honorand's publications (through 2004, plus three items listed as "in press"). Half of the contributions are in Russian, with the rest divided among German (10), English (7), French (1), and Spanish (1). Naturally, work on Iranian languages is well-represented (e.g. M.N. Bogoljubov, G. Buddruss, J.L. García Ramón, R. Schmitt, X. Tremblay, among others), and there is extensive treatment of Anatolian (e.g. J.A. Álvarez-Pedrosa, A. Bernabé, H.C. Melchert, E. Rieken, A.V. Shatskov), among various other IE languages and branches, including Indic (W. Lehmann), Greek (V.L. Cymburskij, N.N. Kazanskij, M. Peters, A.S. Nikolaev), Latin (A.V. Groševa, A.E. Kuznecov, B.B. Xodorkovskaja), Germanic (J.K. Kusmenko, A. Liberman, T.V. Toporova), Baltic (D. Petit), Albanian (E.P. Hamp), Tocharian (G.-J. Pinault), Carian (I. Yakubovich), Galatian (A.I. Falileev), and still others. In addition to all this, there are papers devoted to problems in the reconstruction of Indo-European grammar and culture (I.A. Gerasimov, N. Oettinger, W.R. Schmalstieg, and—not least of all—the late and much-lamented V.N. Toporov). The volume, which is beautifully produced, closes with an extraordinarily thorough "Index verborum." Whatever other trends in present-day Russia may give us cause for concern, the quality of the editing, in these recent books published by the St. Petersburg équipe, has attained standards that should be universally emulated.

The endpaper of the first volume surveyed above announces the publication of a collection of papers (edited by M.N. Bogoljubov) honoring the great Iranist A.L. Grjunberg (1930-1995). The above remarks should make clear why this volume is eagerly anticipated.

References

Ivanov, V.V.
1999 Recent work from St. Petersburg, II (Balkan Studies, Slavic Linguistics and Ethnolinguistics). In V.V. Ivanov and B. Vine (eds.), UCLA Indo-European Studies, vol. 1 (Los Angeles, UCLA Program in Indo-European Studies), 321-331.

Vine, B.
1999 Recent work from St. Petersburg, I (Classical and Indo-European Linguistics, Celtic Studies). In V.V. Ivanov and B. Vine (eds.), UCLA Indo-European Studies, vol. 1 (Los Angeles, UCLA Program in Indo-European Studies), 311-320.

[Bibliographical note: The original printed version of UCLA Indo-European Studies, vol. 1 is no longer available; but most of the contents of the volume can be accessed and freely downloaded at http://www.humnet.ucla.edu/humnet/pies/IESV.html.]

Brent Vine
Department of
Classics / Program in Indo-European Studies
UCLA
vine@humnet.ucla.edu

Hill, Eugen. 2003. Untersuchungen zum inneren Sandhi des Indogermanischen. Der Zusammenstoß von Dentalplosiven im Indoiranischen, Germanischen, Italischen und Keltischen (Münchener Forschungen zur Historischen Sprachwissenschaft, Band 1.) Bremen: Hempen.

This monograph, a revised version of the author's 2000 Munich dissertation, examines one of the oldest problems of Indo-European historical phonology: the treatment of clusters of dental[1] stops (Dentalplosive, hereafter DP) in word-

[1] Or rather "coronal," as the precise phonetics are beyond recovery.